

Many will agree that this past summer flew by, with Tuesday marking the first official day of fall. Another sign that summer has past comes when the Monarch butterflies make their annual migration to the warmer climate in Mexico. With the sun beating down on them last week, the Monarchs were busy gathering nectar from Crown Asters that are in full fall bloom. (Republican photo)