

Tuesday morning was a thing of beauty in Imperial as the cold temperatures left a frosty mark throughout the community. Most noticeable were the trees covered with a heavy frost, making them almost shimmer. Above and at right, the barbed wire and wood fences on Longhorn Street were kissed with the frost, as were the trees along Broadway, below. Unfortunately, the picturesque day was short lived, as the frost disappeared by noon. (Republican photos)

