During five performances at the Chase County Fair, magician Jerry Frasier of Minnesota stymied the audiences with seemingly simple magic.

Using such items as dental floss, rings, tissues and rope, Frasier produced results that had people scratching their heads.

And laughing. Frasier is also a comedian, who invited audience participation both with his magic and with his jokes.

His finale featured someone laying on top of two folding chair backs. Frasier then removed one chair and a board under the “body.”

The person’s limbs remained levitated without the support of the board and chair.
