

Weather is a big factor when there is construction underway in January, and two major projects under construction along Imperial's main street faced weather extremes the past week. Below, the St. Patrick fellowship hall between 7th and 8th Sts. found workers in shirt sleeves last Thursday as they worked in 60-degree weather. This week on Wednesday morning, crews working on the new Frenchman Valley Coop office complex at 2nd and Broadway, above, were digging out the snow as they prepared for a cement pour later this week. (Republican photos)

