

A new building is going up west of the Veterinary Services main office complex on the Miracle Mile that continues to expand the space for their services. Jodi Thompson said this new building was part of their expansion plan that also included the recent completion of an addition to the south of their original building. The building above will be used for work with large animals, including c-sections for cattle and to house sick animals, particularly baby calves, she said. The addition completed earlier this year now houses their exam rooms, surgery/treatment rooms and the offices. The former office area is now used for an animal grooming room, storage and kennels. C & S Construction is contractor for the building above. (Republican photo)
