

Conditions have proved to be less than ideal for this year's wheat harvest as rain and plenty of humidity have slowed progress over the past three weeks. Harvest got started a little after the July 4th weekend and has been crawling along since. On Monday, Chad and Kent Yaw were working on getting their last field of irrigated wheat out of the field. Estimates placed the harvest at between 80-90 percent complete as of Wednesday. (Republican photo)